Officer Reports:BARON & BARONESSGreetings to the Barony from your Baron and Baroness, Dmitri and Gema

While our lands start to show signs of spring we look forward to a number of events in the next few months. We will travel across the lands to join in the festivities at Winter War. Where Dmitri looks forward to donning his armour and crossing swords with many folk. We will also travel across the border to Ice Dragon, one of our favorite events in our neighboring Kingdom of Aethelmearc. Kingdom A&S fast approaches, we encourage Baronial members to participate in A&S so everyone can see the talented individuals we have in Rising Waters. We are sponsoring an award at KA&S this year, chosen for the best drink or food dish. The anticipation of Lady Mary Memorial Tournament returning to its spring dates is building, we are looking forward to this event very much!

As always we continue to encourage our Barony to write to us for award recommendations. We cannot see everything, and would be honored to recognize our members for their contributions to the Barony.

In Service,

Dmitri and Gema

SENESCHALGreetings Good Gentles of Rising Waters,

Glad that Coffee and Chat Night was a success, and we look forward to many more. The consensus was to have them the first Monday of each month at the same location and time. We look forward to seeing you around there. Bring a friend if you wish.

Please do your best to support the ComicCon Demo when more details of this come available. It is a big new scary thing

It is wonderful to see people at meetings so we have full reports and get good perspectives for things going forward. Lady Mary sounds like it is going to be so fun. I am really looking forward to it.

YIS,

Annabelle Makmyllane

CHATELAINEVive la Baronnie de la montée des eaux,Long Live the Barony of Rising Waters,

Je me réjouis à la démo disponible à Niagara Comic Con. Espérons que je peux compter sur chacun d'entre vous à venir une part votre amour de la SCA avec tous. Il y aura de détails à venir à ce sujet sur nos sites de médias sociaux. Ce sera un grand nouveau débouché pour notre club et il serait bon d'avoir tout le soutien possible. Ce sera grande.

Votre prise en charge complète est vraiment apprécié.

I am looking forward to the possible Demo at Niagara ComicCon. Hopefully I can count on each of you to come and share your love of the SCA with all. There will be details coming on this on our social media sites. This will be a big new outlet for our club and it would be great to have all the support possible. This will be big.

Your full support is truly appreciated.

YIS,

Annabelle Makmyllane

HERALDHael and Well-Met!

While the sunny months ahead tease of warmer weather, we are in the colder months of winter. What a great time to think about your heraldry! Think of it: as we head into the glorious summer of tournaments, with your banner flying in the breeze – what a sight! For more information on submitting your name and devices, you can reach me via email at herald.risingwaters@gmail.com.

I am pleased to announce that Elyenora Sparrow has agreed to become deputy Baronial Herald. She is about to embark on an exciting path, helping folks find their name and device, in the court, in the hall and on the list field.

Your Humble Herald,

ban teirna Sciath ingen Chaennaig

SIGNET

Greetings to the Wonderful People of Rising Waters from your Baronial Signet.

Our next scribal gatherings have been scheduled:

- Thursday, March 17th from 7pm to 9pm
- Thursday, April 21st from 7pm to 9pm

The gatherings will be held at 39 George St., in St. Catharines. If you are interested in learning Calligraphy and/or Illumination, or in making scrolls please join us at the scribal gathering!

I am also putting together a list of scrolls that are missing, or require replacement (due to loss or damage). If you have received an award from kingdom or barony, but did not receive a scroll, get in touch with me at signet.risingwaters@gmail.com or call me to let me know.

In Service to the Barony

MARSHALLATEGreetings great Baron of Rising Waters.

Not too much to report this issue.

Practice has been going decently well.

We have seen a few of our neighboring Knights come and share their wisdom and sticks with us.

Our practices will now be seeing once a month hopefully some melee / tactics training.

I have a full work shop should anyone need to use it, free of charge.

Also I am available to help anyone who needs work done to their armor, or construction of armor.

The Barony is also looking for any donations of barrels should anyone have any, for construction of armor.

 That being said, any spare leather strapping, rivets etc. as well.
 Hope to see everyone out.
 Your friendly disgruntled Heavy Marshal,
 Lord Hidetoro

ARTS & SCIENCES

Greetings from Your A & S Minister,
 I would like to wish everyone who enters Kingdom A&S luck and thank you for representing our Barony.

I would also like to remind you of the A&S contest at Lady Mary. We are hosting this event and would like to have many entries from Rising Waters. The theme is “Vices & Virtues”, so get your imagination and your fingers working.

YIS,
 Rohaise de Guildeford for Baron Valdr Jarnsmiðr

CHRONICLER

Greeting One and All,

I am excited to announce a new Articles Contest in the near future. The details will be announced in the May/June 2016 Issue.

There are some items of interest in this issue worthy of note;
 the Winners of the last Contest continue their pieces, there is also an interesting new submission on the Druids.

As always if you go to an event and can take pictures, please submit some for the Cataract.

YIS,
 Rohaise de Guildeford

Capturing Light: Exploring Medieval Glasswork

Part 2 by Sciath Ingen Chaennaig

Pieced Glass

Most of what is known about medieval stained-glass making comes from Theophilus, a twelfth-century German monk. An artist and metalworker himself, Theophilus described in his text, On Diverse Arts, how he carefully studied glaziers and glass painters at work in order to provide detailed directions for creating windows of “inestimable beauty.” A window’s pictorial image is created by arranging the different pieces of colored glass over the design drawn on a piece of board. Fine details such as shadows or outlines are required, the artist paints them on the glass with black paint. The third part in this series will focus more closely on glass painting, or glass staining.

Once the pieces of coloured and painted glass are laid out on the design board, with the edges of each piece fitted into H-shaped strips of lead (comes). These comes are soldered to one another so that the panel is secure. When a panel is completed, putty is inserted between the glass and the lead comes to waterproof the piece. The entire composition is then stabilized with an armature, an iron frame and mounted in the window. The example provided here is a piece of geometric grisaille in the collection of the Stained Glass Museum in Ely (Cambridgeshire, England). Approximately 80% of the glass is original and has been dated c.1200–1250. The panel is mainly composed of white (clear) glass, unpainted and leaded together in a non-figurative design. The term ‘grisaille’ is derived from the French word for grey (gris) and describes the monochrome effect of non-figurative decorative white glass. There are two main types of grisaille, including geometrical designs which are primarily formed by their lead patterns, and organic types which have a painted pattern, such as foliage, on white glass.

Early Cookbooks Part 2

by Baroness Aibhilin kennari fra Skye

Abu Muhammad al-Muzaffar ibn Nasr ibn Sayyar al-Warraq of Baghdad was the compiler of a tenth-century cookbook, Kitab al-tabikh (The Book of Dishes). This is the earliest known cookbook in Arabic. The English Translation I have is called Annals of the Caliphs’ Kitchens: Ibn Sayyar al-Warraq’s Tenth-century Baghdadi Cookbook, Brill, 2007—translated by Nawal Nasrallah.

The compiler of the book was the court cook for Hammdanid King of Aleppo, in the 10 century. Unlike De re coquinaria, we know he was the author because of his culinary poetry was widely enjoyed by many at the time. This book is a wonderful read as it has antidotes about court life in the period. I do tell people if they do not have the original then they should not trust the redaction, but as I do not have an Arabic script you will just have to trust me.

Take 1/2 pound stalled pistachios and put them in hot water to remove their thin skins. Toast the pistachios to dry them but do not let them change in colour. Finley grind them. Pound 1 pound refined sugar into fine powder. Punt it in a bowl and sprinkle it with a little rose water and camphor. Fold into it the pounded pistachio and mix until ingredient combine. Shape the mixture into discs or make them look like dates cucumbers or melons. You can also use holds.

The Political Role of the British Druids:

Their Involvement in the Military Actions Between the Romans and the Celts

By Lady Ermengarde de Barghe, 1986; Edited by Baroness Ariadne Athingana

Introduction

This paper is concerned with the British Celts. It deals with the role of the druids during the time of the Roman invasion of Britain. More specifically, it deals with their role in the rebellions which occurred at that time. The heart of the paper is the section in which the role of the druids in the rebellions against the Romans is considered. The question upon which this paper is based is, "What was the role of the Druids in the Celtic rebellion against the Romans in Britain, between AD 50 and 65?"

Background: The Structure of Society and Lifestyle of the Celts

The structure of Celtic society was similar throughout the Celtic world. Classical writers commented on this fact, and law tracts deal with a society whose structure is recognisable to Classical writers. The society itself was aristocratic in nature. A tribal system existed, each tribe with its own leader, each tribe vying for their leader to become the great king, or 'ri'. As a result, a great deal of fighting occurred between the tribes, which made the Roman conquest of Britain quite easy.

At the top of the hierarchy was a system of kings: a great king ruled over all the other kings; in some cases a minor king was ruled by a major one, who was in turn ruled by the great king. These tribal leaders were called 'vergobretos', or chief magistrates. All these leaders ruled together with the aristocracy. Just beneath the king were his high aristocrats or chief nobles, usually extremely powerful. This class was inclusive of the priests, druids, and seers, usually recruited from the aristocracy. The next step down were freemen, or "gentlemen farmers", similar to an English squire of the eighteenth century. These men owned some land and property. Included in this class are the blacksmith and other fine craftsmen, the former being extremely important in Celtic life. These are the three main strata of Celtic society.

Below these are simply the unfree men, barely above slaves, and the slaves themselves. The freemen and unfree men constituted the largest part of the population, slaves being common but not numerous. A large trade in slaves meant that most of the Celtic slaves were exported, especially to Gaul. This structure of society, derived mainly from classical writers, is very similar to the structure described in early Irish tales and in law tracts, even down to small details. Up to the present day, similarities may be found in the clan structure of Scottish Gaelic society. Anne Ross in Everyday Life of the Pagan Celts, © 1970, summarizes thus:

Each tribe, then, in pagan Celtic areas, had its king, his power indicated by the extent of the lands over which he ruled, the size of his tribe, and the number of his clients;

below him were the noble freemen, and the priests and seers. Caesar mentions this custom of clientship as we have seen, and it is a basic feature of Celtic society....One freeman would become the client or vassal of another more influential freeman....nobles became rich and powerful according to the number of their clients because the client borrowed capital from the lord and paid it back with interest....A freeman could become a powerful noble, not necessarily on account of his aristocratic birth, but because of the number of clients he possessed. [page 37]

The Celts appeared peculiar to the Classical world. They appeared distinct in dress and physical appearance. Despite the fact that the Celts, within their own cultural area, had regional and temporal variations in dress, they appeared as one homogenous culture to the Roman-Greeks.

An example of this is Ammianus Marcellinus writing: Almost all are of tall stature, fair and ruddy, terrible for the fierceness of their eyes, fond of quarrelling, and of overbearing insolence. In fact, a whole band of foreigners will be unable to cope with one of them in a fight, if he calls in his wife, stronger than he by far and with flashing eyes; least of all when she swells her neck and gnashes her teeth, and poisoning her huge white arms, begins to rain blows mingled with kicks like shots discharged by the twisted cords of a catapult.

Dio Cassius describes Boudicca, Queen of the Iceni, one of the Celtic tribes: "She was huge of frame and terrifying of aspect and with a harsh voice. A great mass of bright red hair fell to her knees."

The abundance of hair of these peoples is spoken of everywhere. It appears that it was worn flowing or braided, according to preference, and caught with combs and other ornaments. The men were clean-shaven or moustached, or bearded and moustached. The forked or otherwise beautifully dressed beard described in tales is shown in native artworks. Archaeological evidence proves that the Celts had a passion for personal decoration. Many brooches, finger-rings, ankle-rings, necklets, and elaborate metal belts have been found. Throughout the Celtic world, the emphasis on personal adornment can be seen. The loading of the body, male and female alike, with every kind of trinket, and the gay and flamboyant decoration of both dress material and personal equipment exemplifies this tendency towards personal adornment. As in all heroic society, the giving of rings and personal ornaments had a high status value, and the Celtic society was no exception. The lavish nature of early Celtic clothing, together with their passion for personal display in the form of fine ornaments and weapons, contrasts strikingly with the stark simplicity of their domestic arrangements and living habits.

The clothing of the Celts was also unique in the eyes of the Classical world. Trousers were favoured by the men, particularly impressing the Classical world, being quite foreign to their mode of dress. The main style of clothing in northern British Celtic areas, inclusive of both sexes, seems to have been a knee-length tunic of linen, caught in at the waist with a girdle. Usually, these tunics were fringed.

The tunic was covered by a cloak, which was an important garment. In Britain, the cloak was functional as well as having social importance. The length and style of the cloak indicated the wearer's social status. This cloak was fastened with a brooch of gold or silver; the garment itself was of wool. In summer, the cloak was light, and in winter, it was of a heavier weave. These cloaks were exported for large prices and were taxed heavily by the Romans, who wore them. Another part of the Celtic wardrobe was a fitted leather coat which was worn by charioteers.

Their footwear consisted of leather shoes and sandals. Sometimes linen shoes with soles made of leather were worn. Sandals made of wood are also known to have been used by the Celts. Head-gear of any kind does not seem to have been popular with the Celts, as elaborate hair-styling made it superfluous for most occasions.

An important feature of Celtic society was fosterage. At a young age, a child – whether male or female – was sent to the household of a noble greater than his/her father. There the child was raised in an objective environment and was taught the customs and ways of the culture. The bonds that existed between foster-brothers were extremely powerful. Many feuds occurred between foster-brothers when one refused to aid the other. The bonds which existed between foster-sisters were not this strong in a military sense, although women were also sometimes trained warriors. Rather, with the women it was a matter more of midwifery.

Another facet of Celtic life was aptly stated by Strabo, who writes: "The following is a further peculiar trait: they try not to become stout and fat-bellied, and any young man who exceeds the standard length of the girdle is fined."

As well, he comments:

To the frankness and high-spiritedness of their temperament must be added the traits of childish boastfulness and love of decoration. They wear ornaments of gold, torques on their necks, and bracelets on their arms and wrists, while people of high rank wear dyed garments besprinkled with gold. It is this vanity which makes them unbearable in victory and so completely downcast in defeat.

The Celts had roads, forts, and houses before the Roman Conquest. The houses were circular or rectangular in plan; the round house was the choice of the Britons. As well, the Celts had board games and field sports, juggling, hunting for pleasure and necessity, instrumental and vocal music.

They ate many different types of food, but used no plates. Instead, they used trenchers, a type of hollowed-out bread, to eat from. These are the major aspects of the Celtic lifestyle with the exception of war techniques.

In Celtic society, war was regarded as the norm and highly desirable. Fighting and success in single combat were proper for the young warrior. War and the technique of warfare had a high priority in the everyday life of the Celts. This love for battle and single combat is reflected in the evidences of their daily life and is very much emphasized in their traditions and legends, including those of religion and cults. For instance, the tribal god is first and foremost a superb warrior. The semi-divine hero might stand in for the god in single combat. Similarly, the god could come and aid the semi-divine hero. The weapons of the great heroes were alleged to be inhabited or moved by gods.

The earliest evidence of Celtic weapons and the prototypes for later examples come from burials. They used swords of bronze and iron blades, with ivory and gold hilts. On the armed Celt was a pair of broad-bladed spears, a broad-bladed dagger, and a sword of the type mentioned above. Helmets existed but were not common. The oval shield was used in some Celtic areas, but the round shield was more common. These shields were made of alder wood or wicker work.

Fighting was done from chariots or on foot, the chariots with special ponies bred for their task. The body of the chariot was of light wickerwork. Wooden-sided chariots probably existed, although there has been no evidence of them archaeologically. Chariots had fittings of bronze, tires of iron, and highly decorative horse-trappings with richly adorned harnesses. The chariot carried two men: the charioteer and the warrior. The charioteer was a freeman, the close friend and confidant of the warrior.

Strict rules existed about the other type of combat—single combat. Fair play existed, wherein a man challenged to single combat would only fight one man. Traditionally, the fight took place in a ford. Two men, ready for a fight, would begin by insulting each other. Simultaneously, they would be praising their own ancestors and family, and their prowess in feats of arms. This stirred them up to battle fury and lust for blood and glory; it caused any human compassion to sink back and yield to the sheer brute strength and viciousness which took over and made the combats violent and bloodthirsty.

Unfortunately for the Celts, their own warlike manner caused them to fight amongst themselves a great deal. Thus it was very easy for the Romans to make their conquest. The description above, taken mostly from

The Everyday Life of the Pagan Celts (op. cit.), is that of the Celts around the time of Caesar, ending at about the time when Britain had been effectively overtaken by the Romans. At this time, the extermination of the Druids occurred, except in Ireland, where it was impossible; and the culture of the Celts became a great deal more like that of the Romans. No longer was there the nationalistic influence of the Celts to push them to rebellion. However, until that time, the druids were a heavy influence on the people.

Translation (Euriol's Culinary Journey):

Crisps

Take flour and whites of eggs, sugar or honey and mix together to make a batter. Take lard and place in a skillet and cast the batter therein and stir it until you have many and take them up and plate them with the fritters and serve forth.

My Interpretation:

1 cup flour Vegetable Oil, for frying

8 egg whites 1 cup water

1 Tbsp. honey

Place oil in deep fryer or sauce pan and heat to 375°F.

Greetings from Gilroy Jenkins the Gilded Duck.

This past December I traveled to partake in the fun activities and be witness to the Investiture of the new Baron and Baroness of Rhydderich Hael. Pictured below are some of my adventures. Included in the day was Wild Beast riding (a puppy), shopping with locals and sampling exotic foods from the lands of Aethelmearc. Onward to further adventures...

Meanwhile, combine water, honey and egg whites and whisk together until mixed. Gently add egg white mixture to flour and mix until batter is formed. Drop batter by rounded tablespoon into hot oil and fry until golden brown. Drain on paper towel and serve.

Notes on the Recipe:

In the initial test recipe we used rice flour which created a light texture fritter. We also drizzled extra honey on top.
